

Derivatives Regulation and Legal Risk: Managing Uncertainty in Derivatives Transactions

About the author

Dr Tony Ciro is a Lecturer in Law at La Trobe University, Melbourne, Australia. He is a graduate of Oxford University and has recently completed his doctorate at Monash University, which examined the legal risks that confront the markets for financial derivatives in the United Kingdom, the United States and Australia.

Tony has practised in a commercial law firm, and has taught and researched widely in the areas of accounting and finance, commercial law, intellectual property law, and business law. He has also taught in Malaysia as part of the joint venture arrangements between La Trobe University and Nilai College. He has also taken up an appointment as a visiting academic scholar at Hertford College, Oxford University.

Tony has published a number of scholarly papers examining the legal and regulatory issues affecting financial markets, in particular financial derivatives. He is a well-respected legal scholar for his contribution to financial derivatives research. His works have appeared in leading Australian and international refereed journals, including Company and Securities Law Journal, Journal of International Commercial Law, Current Commercial Law, Journal of Banking, Finance Law and Practice, Australian Business Law Review, Bond Law Review and the Journal of International Financial Markets.

Tony's other research interests include intellectual property, business law, contract law and e-commerce. He is currently engaged in a number of research projects on intellectual property and e-commerce, and will publish the findings of his empirical research in leading academic journals.

Tony is a member of the Victorian Bar, where he practises as a barrister in the fields of financial derivatives, securities regulation, corporate crime, information technology and intellectual property law.

Tony holds a Bachelor of Economics (Hons) and Bachelor of Laws (Hons) from Monash University, a Bachelor of Civil Law from Oxford University, and a Doctor of Philosophy in law from Monash University.